10. Report Re:

Transcript of wiretap recording captured on April 8th, 1989, by confidential informant codenamed "Lonesome End".

Persons of note: Rowan Abbott (RA), Henry Jennings (HJ)

RA: Mr. Jennings, please come in.

HJ: Thanks for seeing me, Mr. Abbott. And you can just call me Hank.

RA: Very well, Hank. Apologies for the wait, but at any given moment I've dozens of active business dealings spanning four continents. Free moments are hard to come by.

HJ: Well then I'll try not to waste your time. My schedule has cleared up of late, and I'm looking for a steady stream of employment. From what I know of your operation, I feel I'd be a good fit here.

RA: Eckhardt Global is a multifaceted organization. Exactly what skillsets and expertise would you say you bring to the table? Import/export? Management experience? Foreign investment?

HJ: I'd say... I'm really more of a problem solver.

RA: Ah, intriguing. Could you give me an example of a problem you've solved in a past work environment?

HJ: I've got a pretty good example that was of some benefit to you, believe it or not. You remember old Andrew Packard?

RA: Most assuredly I do. A man of great stature, but stubborn to the end. His loss has affected many of his old business partners.

HJ: For the better, I'd dare say. I was hired to make sure that Mr. Packard stayed out of the picture. In a professional capacity, of course. Once I was through with him, his days of giving grief to his competitors were over. Frankly, you could say I've already done your organization a favor.

RA: Entertaining view of events. But as it happens, I've already studied your résumé quite extensively. Had you not approached us, I'd have sent someone to approach you in due time myself.

10. Report Re:

RA (Cont'd): You see, although your plan to get rid of Andrew Packard was... thorough, there was one piece where your plan fell short.

HJ: Oh yeah? Which piece was that?

RA: The part where you killed Andrew Packard:

HJ: What the hell are these?

RA: Those are photos of Andrew Packard, alive and well. Those were taken just over a week ago. I'd say your role in Andrew's death is severely overstated.

HJ: How do you know all this?

RA: The woman who hired you, Josie Packard, worked for my deceased benefactor, Thomas Eckhardt. So in effect, you've already worked for me, Mr. Jennings, and you've failed. Frankly, you could say you owe my organization for failing to render past services.

HJ: I--

RA: So I'm glad you are so eager to offer your services, Mr. Jennings, because I fully intend to utilize them. I hope you weren't expecting a hefty payday, since you'll have to work to make up for your past mistakes.

HJ: And what if I don't accept these terms? I've got standards, you know.

RA: Unlikely, but possible. But you also have a wife.

HJ: What are you saying?

RA: Your wife. Norma Jennings, yes? I understand your marriage has been rocky of late, but your feelings for her don't seem to have diminished despite your troubles. In light of that, I would hate for Norma to face any undue adversity due to your refusal to make good on your debts.

HJ: I swear to God, Abbott, if you are threatening my wife--

RA: I'm not threatening your wife, Mr. Jennings, nor you. I am simply telling you what will happen if you fail to live up to your potential with Eckhardt Global.

HJ: Understood. But don't think I'll forget this.

RA: I very much hope you don't. There's no motivator quite as strong as hatred. Expect a call from me soon, Mr. Jennings. I have big things planned for Twin Peaks, and you'll play a big part in making them happen.
